"STAR OF BETHLEHEM" PLACED IN HEART OF NEW YORK BY UNKNOWN WOMAN FOR WORLD TO SEE.

Every night in the year, Christmas to Christmas, this man-made "star of Bethlehem" gives to the little world surrounding it the message of "hope, peace and good will to all men."

A woman—unknown—placed this star in Madison square park, New York city.

It is at the top of a 30-foot pole, the cost of erecting and maintaining it was borne by the unknown woman. Last year there was an immense "Christmas tree," brilliantly lighted, placed in this park, the home of many wanderers.

That tree touched a spot in the "unknown's" heart. She thought of that star of Bethlehem shining over the Babe's cradle! When the tree came down she wrote the people who had placed it there, offering to bear all expenses if they would keep that "star of Bethlehem" shining the year round, carrying its message of love and hope into the hearts of the hundreds of thousands who nightly pass the park.

No one knows aught of the "unknown" beyond the fact that a woman's hand penned the letter.

The "star" shines there tonight as it did last night and as it will tomorrow night and the next night!

COST WOULD BE NEARER $200,000
SAY THE EXPERTS

meeting Monday night, with regard to municipal lighting, Fred A. Bryan, general manager of the Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., stated Tuesday that it will probably be some little time before he can prepare a statement such as would be necessary to give the address the refutation which he considers it deserves.

"Anyway," says Mr. Bryan, "I am indisposed to get into any personal controversy with Mr. Rice, or anyone else, through the newspapers or otherwise, with regard to this lighting contract. The board of public works has our bids. The council has an ordinance embodying the acceptance of the bids most agreeable to the board. If that is not satisfactory, and there is any way of getting a different rate out of the state utilities commission, there is the place to get it, and I presume we will have to abide by the decision. However, I am not frightened over the probable establishing of a municipal lighting, or even distributing plant here, and that is as much as I care to say at present."

In words, to the above effect, if not directly connected, the electric magnate dismissed the subject in an interview Tuesday, interpolating, however, that he would be glad to pay $70,000 for the additional construction work that will be required of the Indiana & Michigan to carry out the contract which the board of public works would have confirmed.

"It will entail 25 miles of underground wiring," he said, and outlined all that district from Lafayette av. to and including Chapin st. and LaPorte av. and Washington and Colfax av. to Circle av., thence north to the St. Joseph river and south to the Lake Shore railroad. Also Vista av. to city limits and Michigan and Portage av. to the "Three-I" railway.

Changes Face of Things.
According to figures obtainable from utility commission reports of Wisconsin, Massachusetts and elsewhere, and gathered from technical journals, Councilman Rice is approximately $145,000 short on what the cost of a distributing plant would come to. With 25 miles of underground, against 35 miles of overhead wiring, rather than two miles of underground, as against 58 miles of overhead wiring, the cost of construction even at the councilman's own rate per mile would be $199,500 instead of $54,600, as he estimated it.

When confronted with a glimpse at the figures Tuesday night, Councilman Rice, however, failed to be nonplussed. He asserted that he had consulted three experts and while their figures might not be positively correct; he believed they were not far off. He points out that the city would not require as heavy poles for overhead work, nor as large conduits for underground work as must be contemplated in the figures of the experts, which would account for the amazing difference. The city does not contemplate a plant for the distribution of commercial power or light, which would also lessen the weight of wire needed.

"I am ready to meet with anyone and discuss these figures, who may want to discuss them," said Councilman Rice during the interview. "I may be wrong but I will have to be shown. We have a right to an expert investigation, and to know whether or not the city is being flim-flamed. It would do no harm to let the ordinance wait on the table until such investigation can be had, and then, if we find the Indiana & Michigan bid to be all right, why, of course, accept it."

And it may be that injunction will be resorted to as a means of forcing such tabling. This is not on information from Mr. Rice, but there are indications in citizens' circles, that the councilmen favoring the lighting contract may not be able to bring it to vote, at least until a hearing has been had on the subject, probably in the circuit court.

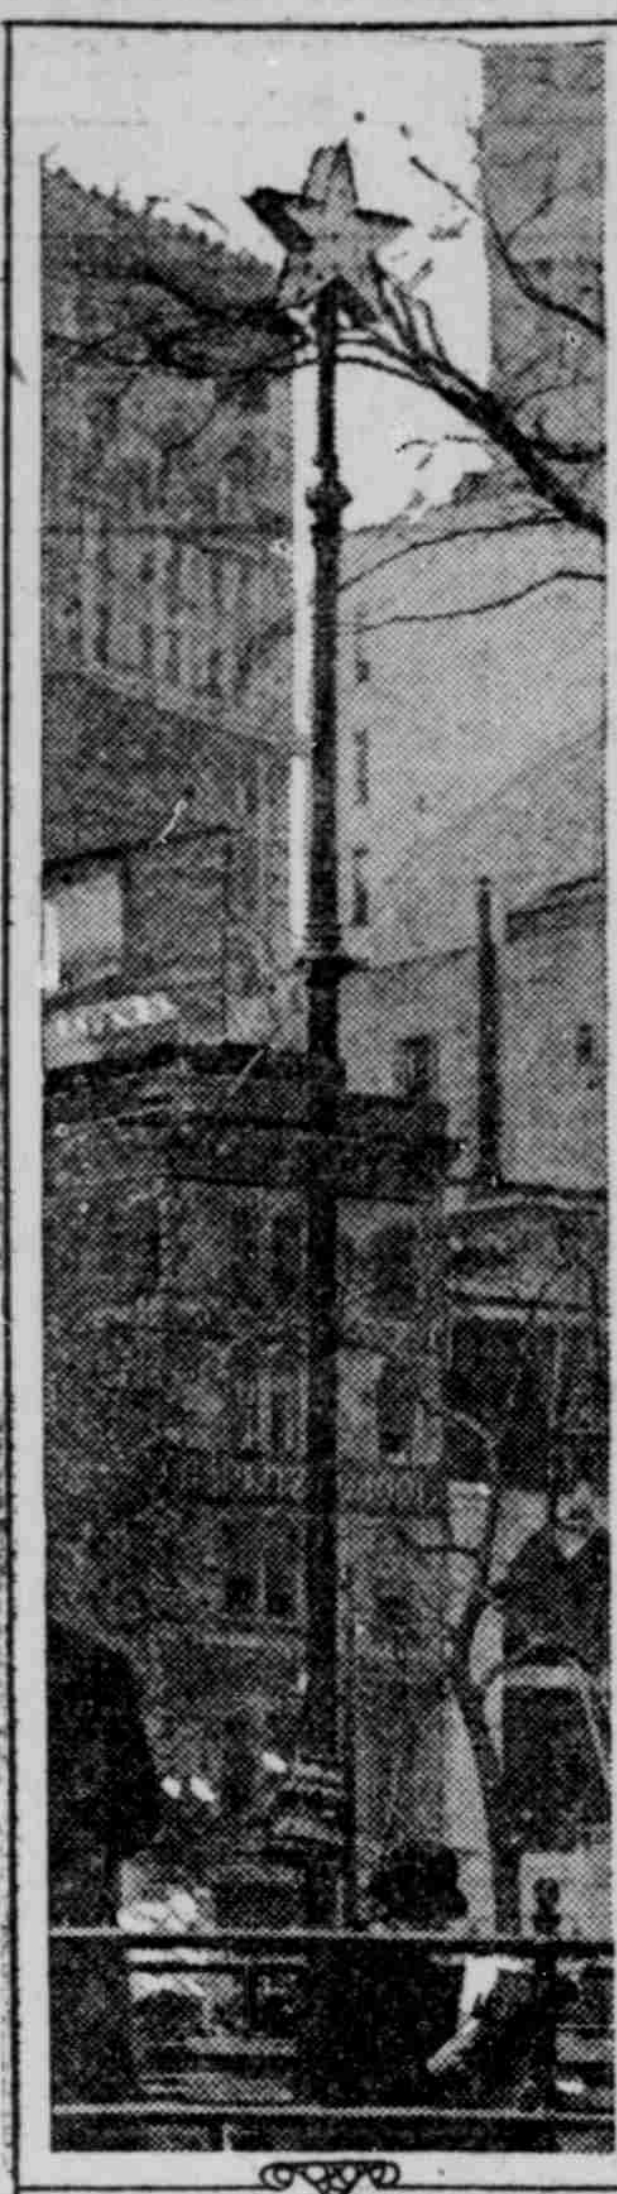

By the use of a restraining order, the council might be prevented from executing a contract pending investigation of the rates, notwithstanding that it is insisted by the administration that there can be nothing for a utility commission to investigate until there is a contract. Exactly whether the citizens, and remonstrators will go to the lengths of applying for an injunction, however, is a problem. It is claimed that the work in that direction is being put forward under the leadership of Councilmen Rice, Fink and Buchner, who voted to table the ordinance Monday night.
